Israeli Officials Deny Charge That Jews Wish To Go To Soviet Union Or Lands

Israeli officials indicated there was no evidence that large numbers of Jews in Israel wished to return to the Soviet Union or the Soviet bloc countries. They were reluctant to contradict directly recent statements attributed to Nikita S. Khrushchev, Soviet Premier, on the subject of Jewish migration, says the New York Times, but officials responsible for the movement into and out of Israel said there was no unusual number of applications for exit permits.

Neither did they have any knowledge of widespread discontent, beyond what they described as "certain normal grousing," among immigrants from the satellite areas. Mr. Khrushchev was quoted in dispatches from Moscow as having told a group of American war veterans recently that it was "possible" that Soviet Jews would be allowed to go to Israel sometime in the future.

He was also quoted as having said that many Jews were asking to return from Israel to their countries of origin. Migration officials at Jerusalem pointed out that except for a handful of family reunification cases, there would have been virtually no direct immigration from the Soviet Union either to Israel or Palestine since the Russian Revolution. The majority of Russian Jews in Israel came there before World War I as Zionist pioneers. Today many of them are leaders in the Government and the Jewish Agency for Israel.

Since 1956, 40,000 Jews have been permitted to leave Poland for Israel. Of that number approximately 2,000 have emigrated from Israel, says the New York Times. But according to migration officials, only seventeen families returned to Poland. Dr. Joseph Goldin, Deputy Director of the Ministry of Interior, said his office had received no substantial number of applications for exit permits for Iron Curtain countries or to the Soviet Union. He said there were some "single cases" planning to return to satellite areas, but he thought the total was less than ten.

Any Israeli citizen may obtain a permit to leave the country. During 1958, some 7,724 Israelis emigrated. More than half of those went to the United States. Zionist leaders in Israel have long dreamed of "rescuing" large numbers of Jews from the Soviet Union and bringing them to Israel, but Mr. Khrushchev's statement attracted very little attention there.

Kol Israel, the Government radio station, pointed out Mr. Khrushchev had reportedly made a similar statement to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt a year ago, and there has been no immigration of Jews from the Soviet Union since then, says the New York Times. Immigration from Eastern Europe, particularly Rumania, has virtually ended after several thousand Jews from those areas arrived there late last year.

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 33 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada; and one of only four published weekly in English. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. It is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, in the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power as well as understanding and appreciation of quality and prestige in goods and services.

The Canadian Jewish Review is a Jewish community publication; it fills a real need, acting as the link between the individual family and the whole Jewish world at large. It is a community record; is informative about the important Jewish world news, and gives the trends in Jewish thought and social welfare in these changing times. It reports the organizational life of all ages in the Jewish group; and Jewish life in far-off communities, with items of interest to women appearing weekly.

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

Khrushchev Says Some Day Any One May Leave Russia

According to Premier Nikita S. Krushchev, "many Jews are finding themselves in difficulties in Israel. Many of them are asking for visas to return," he was reported to have told a group of seven Americans. The Americans were veterans of World War II who were in the Soviet Union for a reunion with the Soviet soldiers they met in the closing days of the war in the link-up of the United States and Soviet armies on the Elbe River.

The Soviet Premier commented that a great number of Soviet Jews were craftsmen and intellectuals who would "find it difficult living in Israel as farmers." (It is not clear which Jews Mr. Khrushchev was referring to, says the New York Times. The Soviet Union has refused to allow emigration to Israel. The only significant movement was through Poland two years ago. The emigrés were former Polish citizens returning from the Soviet Union under a repatriation agreement signed in November, 1956. Almost all Jews among the repatriates went on to Israel until the Poles halted the exodus.)

"Many thought that they would try to find the promised land and they did not find it," Mr. Khrushchev said. "Among the intellectual Jews in the country, a great majority are critical about going to Palestine. There are no restrictions here for their talents. A large percentage of the intellectuals in the Soviet Union are Jews, many in responsible positions. They are doing everything, including work on the atomic bomb. They played an important role in the development of nuclear weapons. They have everything they wish."

The Premier said that before World War II there were 4,000,000 Jews in the Soviet Union and the latest census taken last January indicated that there were now about 2,000,000. "The rest were killed during the war," he declared. "Bodies of many Jews were found in mass graves by the advancing Soviet armies," he said, "and the retreating Germans did not have time to burn them."

Premier Khrushchev was previously quoted as having said that his Government was "playing with the possibility" of permitting Soviet citizens of any nationality to leave the country if they wished, says the New York Times. The American veterans met Mr. Khrushchev in the Kremlin with his chief translator. When they asked him whether Soviet Jews would be permitted to go to Israel if they wanted to, Mr. Khrushchev replied: "In general, we are playing with the possibility that in some future time we shall allow any person of any nationality to leave."

Such a move would be regarded as a major shift toward liberalization under the Khrushchev regime. During the time earlier this year when several thousand Jews were being permitted to leave for Israel from Rumania and Poland there was no such emigration from the Soviet Union.

"Generally speaking the Soviet Union already has begun to ease restrictions on travel abroad by Soviet citizens," Mr. Khrushchev said. "We have a shortage of dollars and we are saving them," he said. He said it was easier to get into the Soviet Union than into the United States.

"We have raised the curtain completely," he declared as he sat with his arm around one of the veterans. "There are more American than Russian tourists, but I think that will be only temporary," he said. "America is richer at present, but we shall catch up and surpass America. Then we shall see how many Russians will travel."

Mr. Khrushchev recalled that when there was a possibility that Boris Pasternak might leave the Soviet Union after having been awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature last year, it was the Russian author himself who declined to go. As the Premier put it, "It would have been tantamount to death for him."

Mr. Khrushchev told his guests they were wrong to say that Americans were free to leave their country whenever they wished, says the New York Times. He cited the cases of Paul Robeson, the Negro singer, and W. E. B. Dubois, the Negro writer, both of whom waited for several years to obtain passports for trips abroad.

Born In Lithuania, Was A Top Expert On U.S. Antiques

Israel Sack, one of the nation's leading dealers in American antiques, died in Brooks Memorial Hospital, in Brookline, Mass., after a long illness. He was 75 years old and lived in Brookline. Mr. Sack, who retired several years ago, for many years had headed Israel Sack, Inc., at 5 East Fifty-seventh Street, New York. He began his business in Boston in 1905 and moved it there in 1931. His sons, Albert, Harold and Robert, now carry it on.

Although not born in the U.S., being a native of Lithuania, he was considered one of the foremost authorities on American antiques, says the New York Times. He had a large part in the growth in appreciation and value of antiques of American origin. This was in opposition to earlier feeling in the country that American antiques were inferior to foreign ones.

Mr. Sack, after he was conscripted into the Russian Army, escaped to Germany and then to England. There he worked for a time as a cabinetmaker to get money for passage to America. In 1903 he arrived in Boston, where he went to work for an antiques dealer.

Two years later he began his own antiques retail business in Boston. From that time he never ceased in his efforts to have American museums install American sections.

He played an important part in the formation of fine American antiques collections in the Detroit Institute of Arts, the Art Institute of Chicago, the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Deerfield Village in Deerfield, Mass., the Henry F. du Pont Winterhur Museum and the William Rockhill Nelson Gallery, Kansas City, Mo. He also had a part in the furnishing of the Katherine Prentis Murphy Rooms of the New York Historical Society.

For the late Henry Ford, Mr. Sack completely furnished the Wayside Inn, in Sudbury, Mass. Mr. Sack also supplied many antiques to the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Mich. One of the pieces he sold to the museum was a highboy once owned by Mrs. Mary Ball Washington, mother of George Washington.

He was instrumental in having a silver bowl, made in 1768 by Paul Revere, presented in 1949 by a Massachusetts citizen's group to the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. The bowl had been presented by the Sons of Liberty to the Massachusetts Bay General Court to commemorate its vote of defiance of King George III of England, says the New York Times.

Mr. Sack also had much to do with the furnishing of colonial Williamsburg, Va. He furnished

Arabs Not Invited To Eban U. N. Farewell; Soviet Bloc Declines

U. Thant, Burmese delegate to the United Nations, said that "only peaceful coexistence between the Arabs and Jews could offer any hope of reconciling these two great peoples in the Middle East."

Mr. Thant, who spoke at a farewell dinner at the United Nations for Abba Eban, Israeli representative at the United Nations, conceded that there were "many great difficulties" in the way of a settlement of Israeli-Arab problems, says the New York Times. Mr. Thant declared it would be better "for all of us who are both friends of the Arabs as well of the Jews" to face them and to help find "a just and lasting solution."

The Burmese Ambassador expressed the hope that Mr. Eban, who is leaving his country's foreign service and will return to Israel this month to become a candidate for the Israeli Knesset (parliament), would "help in creating a congenial atmosphere in this great search."

Tribute to Mr. Eban was paid also by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was a member of the United States delegation to the General Assembly when Israel was admitted to the United Nations ten years ago, also on May 11; former Gov. Thomas E. Dewey; Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican, of New York; Sir Pierson Dixon, a British permanent delegate to the United Nations; and Henry Steele Commager, historian.

The dinner was given by the Israeli delegation to permit Mr. Eban, who has served simultaneously as Israel's Ambassador to Washington, to say goodby to his colleagues at the United Nations. Forty-five members of the United Nations were represented at the dinner. The Soviet Union and the eight other members of the Soviet bloc declined invitations, says the New York Times. Delegates of the Arab states, which have not recognized Israel, were not invited.

In a speech prepared for his response, Mr. Eban said that, even after Israel had achieved "survival" there were many dangers. He recalled issues that had come before the United Nations since 1949 — "The Negev and Jerusalem, the Hula marshes, frontier clashes one upon the other, maritime freedom, the Suez Canal, Gaza, Elath — the very list gives a somber impression of the constancy and vehemence of our struggle."

"In terms of broad historic justice," Mr. Eban said, "Israel owes gratitude to the United Nations and honor to its flag." Mr. Eban predicted that by 1960 six new African states would become members of the United Nations and he said that "Israel has known no experience more moving than to join with other young states in seeking that union between political freedom and economic dynamism which holds the secret of true national freedom."

made from sweet Concord grapes by the most famous name in Canadian winemaking!

Years of planning It took more than three years, after the decision was taken to introduce a kosher wine, before the first beautiful decanter of "Mazel Tov" was placed on the market. The strict details of Kashruth had to be arranged with the rabbis, and elaborate testing and research undertaken. From all this came "Mazel Tov"—a wine we are proud to offer from coast to coast in Canada.

Delicious "heimish" flavour This sweet rich wine in its beautiful decanter bottle recaptures the taste you used to know. It is the wine you sipped at the Pesach seders, the wine beside the candles at the Sabbath meal, the wine you made Kiddush with at Yom Tov, and the wine with which you toasted "L'chayim" at every simcha. "Mazel Tov" is a wine you'll "remember" with pleasure as you drink it. It's a wine that says "Mazel Tov" on your lips, as in the glass.

Available now! In Quebec, "Mazel Tov" is on sale at most QLC stores. In Ontario, "Mazel Tov" is available at LCBO stores, and at any of Bright's retail wine stores.

In the Toronto metropolitan area, for free delivery of three bottles or more, phone LE 4-7557.

CLASS IN COOKERY

KASHE KNISH

one-half pound shortening
one-half cup boiling water
two to two and one-half cups sifted flour
pinch salt

Cut up shortening very fine. Add boiling water and beat until shortening is melted. Add flour, gradually, until dough can be handled easily. Roll it in wax paper and refrigerate. This can be kept indefinitely. The day before serving beat an egg into contents of package of kashe halves. Mix thoroughly and let stand until dry. Take one cup of mixture and add enough boiling water to cover it. Pour this into a heat-proof dish and bake at 300 degrees for a one-half hour until water is absorbed. Brown four or five sliced onions and one clove of garlic with four or five tablespoons of chicken fat. Add this to the kashe with salt and pepper. Let it cool. Roll out pastry and spread with cool mixture. Then bake at 350 degrees for one-half hour until brown. This should make approximately four rolls. Cut when it cools. This may be baked one-half hour before serving.

The Tribe That Kept Its Head

BY SAMUEL SOMMERSKY, PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF TEL AVIV

It happened the way it is written in the holy books, the way the learned men had been teaching since times immemorial. On a certain day the rumor spread that the Messiah had come and was now in the Sultan's palace, discussing with him the return of the entire tribe to Zion, where the kingdom of Israel had been re-established. The rumor wasn't true in all its details, for the man in the Sultan's palace was not the Messiah but an ordinary — though very daring — human being, and he had made the month's long, tortuous trip in behalf of an earthly organization, the Jewish Agency. In essence, however, it was true: he had come to take them all to Zion.

The Habbanim tribe which had lived in isolation from any other Jewish community since, legend tells, the destruction of the First Temple, was not totally unaware of the events in faraway Israel. In spite of distance and lack of direct communication with the outside world, some news had been filtering through, and the arrival of the emissary wasn't totally unexpected. As a matter of fact, a few families left the village on their way to Zion some time before.

But it wasn't till that fateful day in spring, 1950, that the ancient hopes of the Habbanim tribe suddenly became flesh and blood. The Sultan agreed to their exodus, and the council of elders joyfully made the decision for the hundred-odd families of which the tribe consisted. Several weeks later, they were all on their way in a convoy of trucks which traversed the vast expanse of the desert to reach the port of Aden. From there the "wings of eagles" as predicted in the holy books — the airplane — took them to Lydda in Israel.

The village Habban is a speck on the face of a land called Hadhramaut, an Arabic corruption of the Biblical Hatzar Hamavet, meaning the Courtyard of Death, a strange name whose origin was lost through the millenia. As it happens in feudal societies, it hasn't always been clear to whom sovereignty of the territory belonged, but in recent years England claimed it as part of the Aden Protectorate. The actual ruler is the Sultan of Aznan, a hereditary governor whose main occupation is conducting unending wars with the neighboring sultans.

There is no regular taxation system in Hadhramaut, and the Jews of Habban paid only occasional contributions to the Sultan, usually when a war exhausted his purse. This assured them protection, and the Habbanim lived in peace, pursuing their traditional trade of silversmiths, maintaining good relations with the surrounding Arabs, adhering to their ancient, unchanging customs, and dreaming of Zion.

The Jews of Habban are now in a village named Barreket, about three kilometers from the Lydda airport, a half hour's drive from Tel-Aviv. A dusty road stops short of the village — a cluster of boxlike houses with two larger boxes in the center, the synagogue and the school. There are children all over, wallowing in the dust, going about their serious business of play.

A small, lithe woman in an ankle-length dress with a silver belt and a profusion of jewelry around her wrist, neck and forehead, walks across an empty lot carrying a bowl of steaming soup on her head. She throws a curious look at the two strangers with cameras, gives them a pleasant "shalom" and continues on her errand.

Three men pass by carrying carpentry tools; they are dressed in khaki work-clothes, but one of them wears an intricately wound turban while the other two sport berets. They, too, greet us with dignified politeness. I ask for the house of the chairman of the village council, and they give me directions in a guttural Hebrew, hard to understand.

The chairman is a man this side of thirty, tall and thin but muscular and erect. His Hebrew has retained only the barest trace of the Arabian desert, his choice of words is careful, his manner proud and natural. The house, which I am told is the best furnished in the village, bears no testimony to the owner's origin. Spotlessly clean, with the standard, inexpensive furniture found in most Israeli lower-income homes, it has an electric refrigerator occupying a place of honor in the living room, and cheap prints, including a small Renoir woman's head, on the wall.

The head of the household, Yakov Matof, is a member of the border police. His job, as he says himself with a smile, is a throwback to the distant past of the Habbanim who were once professional soldiers in the service of various feudal lords. It was the heavy toll of life paid in an unusually bloody war that made them settle down to the less exciting, but much safer, trade of making silver bracelets and necklaces.

Matof became chairman of the village council by way of democratic elections, a far cry from the old custom according to which members of the council of elders came by their offices through inheritance. He is of course a member of the Matof clan, the clan of leaders and scholars in the once rigidly stratified Habbani society, but this circumstance, he assured me, had only a slight bearing on his election.

He showed me a book published by the Jewish Agency emissary who made the historic journey to Hadhramaut, and in it a photograph of himself in native habitat and costume, with shoulder-length hair, flowing robe and bejewelled dagger in his belt. I looked at his trimmed hair, white nylon shirt and khaki trousers. How much has life changed with the change in outward appearance?

For one thing the Habbanim no longer pursue their traditional occupation. Most of them would have liked to continue making beautiful objects out of silver and precious stones, but they found no market for their product in a country where jewelry is a luxury and not an integral part of a way of life as it was in Hadhramaut. So they found work in agriculture, in less artistic trades such as carpentry and plumbing, as drivers, house painters, etc. Only three men of the entire tribe remained silversmiths, and these work at their trade only part time.

What other changes? Polygamy had to go in deference to the law of the land, regretted by many of the men, lamented by the long suffering women. There are several polygamous families in Bareket, who arrived that way from Habban, with up to three wives and countless children.

A grizzled oldster whom I met in the general store politely expressed his resentment at the new state of affairs by saying that he had the highest admiration for Ben-Gurion who established the kingdom of Israel and brought the children of Abraham back to their land, but he couldn't understand why the great man had to destroy family life as practised since the days of the Patriarchs.

He had only two wives, both more than thirty years his junior (two previous wives had died, both in childbirth) and he could use at least one more to provide him with children for his old age. He does very little work himself; one of his wives travels daily to the city where she hires herself out for domestic work, while the other, in the last stage of pregnancy, stays home to take care of the enormous combined brood and the house. The polygamous families are, as a rule, the poorest, and their children the worst cared for.

But the old family structure with patriarchal authority remains — held together by tradition and religion. Of the entire tribe only one young man left the village to strike out on his own in the big city, while the rest have stayed within the tribal framework. Strict observance of religious law, going far beyond anything ever dreamed up by European Jewish sects, continues to be the rule, according to the rabbi, another member of the Matof clan who inherited his office from countless forbears.

Of course, he says, in a vast wheatfield there must grow some diseased stalks, but the field as a whole is healthy. The rabbi is a sad-looking little man with a pin-

The Making Of A Canadian "Sky Pilot"

BY RABBI SAMUEL M. SUSSTEIN, AGUDATH ISRAEL CONGREGATION, OTTAWA, ONTARIO

On my terminal leave, a few months later, I was invited by the Jewish Welfare Board to conduct High Holiday services at their chapel in Frankfort. The evening after the holiday I took my last trip as an American for many years to come, travelling to Munich. It would have been illegal for me to enter Israel, using an American passport, with the possibility of ending up in the armed forces, so I had to travel underground. This method of travel is not always as secretive as it sounds. I was compelled to destroy, or prepare for instant destruction, all evidences of my Americanism. I was given a false name and false emigrant papers, and was added to a transport of over four hundred people travelling to Marseilles and thence to Israel.

My companions were experienced refugee travellers. At every station stop they would race out, fill up water bottles, wash clothing or themselves under the taps, visit with friends in other compartments, or stroll about, with their children and infants, to enjoy a stretch.

We arrived in Marseilles late at night, and were taken by truck to various farm houses in the suburbs. I was included in a group of about sixty in a farming village called Caillols. We were quartered in three rooms, each individual being given a cot, blanket, and day's ration. Our life there is a story in itself, and I described it in a series in the Canadian Jewish Review several years ago.

During this trip, as well as throughout my life, I have found my Boy Scout training invaluable. I had been both Scout and Scoutmaster in Manhattan, and learned not only the skills of Scouting but the general outlook as well. The specific skills are always useful.

In the transient camp, for example, I preferred to do my own cooking rather than eat from the general mess. During most of my travels I would do my own cooking on a small chemical stove. (This is quite common in Europe. Travelers on trains warm their meals and coffee in their own compartments over stoves which use dry alcohol tablets, Esbit or Heatabs). I usually washed my own clothing, did my own darning and sewing.

Far more valuable than the particular abilities, however, is the mental and emotional preparation to get along without any of the trappings of our contemporary life of ease, comfort, and push buttons. No matter where I was, no matter where I expected to end up, no matter what the conditions, I felt that I could manage to keep going despite deprivation, disability, lack of facilities or amenities. The Scout program, if properly implemented, can develop the courage, confidence, and self-reliance that will enable one to face anything.

From the D.P.'s I acquired a habit which haunts me to this day: to travel always with some food. They had learned that meals were not always available immediately on arriving at a new reception center, and that sources of supply were not always reliable.

I spent my time reading, discussing international politics with my fellows, and walking around Marseilles. My camp-mates knew that I was the American rabbi who had once supervised them, but I could not admit my origin to any one else. One day I met, in a small kosher restaurant in the city, a group of American lads serving on a former liberty ship then smuggling to Israel. They were members of the religious Zionist club to which I had belonged in the States, Hashomer Hadati (now Bnai Akiva), and they brought me up to date on many of our mutual friends, quite a number of whom were already in Israel. I also met an American chaplain whom I had known in Germany; we bumped into each other one day on the main street of Marseilles, and he treated me to a good meal and a warm shower in his hotel.

We stayed at Caillols about three weeks. Late one Saturday night a representative of the Jewish Agency (recognized by the French government as responsible for the migration) gathered us in the dining hall of our camp. We were all given new names, to fit in on a collective visa. My second alias in a month was Sawdi Litman, and I wrote it carefully on all my luggage. We all packed, being sure to add a few tins of sardines and a loaf of fresh bread to our belongings.

The next day groups from all over the area were brought by truck to a pier where stood the S. S. Negba, ready for its first voyage under the Israel flag. This huge group of unorganized civilians, gathered from over thirty camps within a radius of fifty miles of the port, boarded the ship, were given bunk assignments and baggage was stowed, in a few hours. There were no conflicts in the allocation of space; there were no empty bunks nor extra passengers.

Families were separated into male and female barracks, with hammocks or bunks running into the hundreds. Pregnant women and those with infants were assigned to second class cabins, while the few paying passengers were crowded into first class accommodations, with six living in cabins built for two.

After a five days' trip across the Mediterranean, going far north to avoid the danger of attack from Egyptian planes, we arrived in Haifa. Immigrant families were taken immediately to reception centers, whence, in the course of time, they moved out into the general economy of the country. In some areas, these "maabarot" were planned to develop, as houses replaced tents, into entirely new communities.

On my arrival, I registered as member of a cooperative farm, composed in large part of English-speaking youth with religious Zionist backgrounds. Since the farm was located in a strategic position, we were exempt from formal military draft. I felt that unless I could practice my "highest" military skill, flying, I would be making my greatest contribution to the country as a member of this kibbutz (settlement). During my "enrolment vacation" I travelled around the country living the life of a hobo. Hitchhiking was the universal method of travel. On the outskirts of the cities special "hitching posts" were designated, supervised by military police, where military personnel on leave, as well as civilians, could wait for rides. There were few private vehicles, and most travel was by truck. Dozens of hikers would clamber over the sides of trucks, while they were still rolling, with complete disregard for safety, at the invitation of the drivers.

Food could be obtained, at low prices, at charity kitchens, and a bed in a cheap hotel (in a room of ten) might cost the price of a package of cigarettes. I would drop in on friends, whether Israelis I had met in Germany or Americans who were in Israel at the time, for occasional days of luxury. (Since I was still incognito, my family could not tell me about a great-aunt living in Jerusalem). From time to time I would work at hauling bricks to earn a pound or two, to pay for hotel and meals for the next few days.

During this free time I approached various offices in the Air Force to see whether I could join as a pilot. The military situation was so fluid that one week they were not interested in me; a few days later, although I had only a private pilot's license and sixty hours' flight experience, I was welcomed and recruited.

I was one of several hundred "Mahal" volunteers, people from the free world and not from lands which were then expelling their Jewish citizens. Most of the immigrants, who doubled the population of the country in the space of three years, came under some form of pressure from the D. P. camps, from Yemen, from Iraq, from Iran, from India and Shanghai, from North Africa, from Egypt and Sudan. Immigrants of military age were taken directly into the army, which served as a patriotic educational machine. The lowest ranks were usually composed of newcomers and we did not have to read the newspaper to learn which country had most recently confiscated Jewish property or passed repressive legislation against Jews.

Not all of the foreign volunteers were Jewish. At least two Canadian non-Jews died for Israel, and many more Americans. Both the Jews and non-Jews were motivated by more than sympathy for Israel. We felt that we were creating an informal United Nations army, to aid the implementation of a UN resolution which was being subverted by a group of intransigeant nations. The Partition Resolution of November 29, 1947, had called for the establishment of two independent states in what had formerly been Palestine, to be bound by a customs union. The bulk of the territory earmarked for the independent Arab state (2,000 square miles) was annexed by Transjordan; part is held by Egypt as the Gaza strip, and about 1,400 square miles fell to Israel by the fortunes of war.

I met one Jewish lad (who has since returned to the States) who was communicating with a group of Arabs in Hebron, and was prepared to volunteer his services as a navigator to aid in the establishment of the independent Arab state. The members of the Arab League, on their side, insisted that the UN resolution was illegal, despite its majority passage, and that they were entitled to rebel and fight against it.

The standard of living in Israel was low, but the morale was high. In the Air Force, which received the best food, air crew were supposed to receive two eggs per day. Some military dietitian claimed that seven small olives had the same food value as an egg: during several months when eggs were unavailable the required equivalent of olives was carefully counted into our plates in a meal-time ritual. For several months we had meat only twice a week: our weekly ration consisted of four ounces of luncheon meat produced in Winnipeg. Our other protein came from a small portion of imported, frozen, fillet fish.

ched face and thoughtful eyes. I found him in his consultation room, where he was relaxing on a cot after the midday meal. There were remains of food on the table which also held a number of dog-eared books. I picked up one and found it to be a "Shulchan Aruch," printed in Vilna by the Brothers and Widow Rom in 1898. All the religious books the Habbanim have used for generations came from Eastern Europe, arriving there via Aden.

The rabbi does not believe that the religious way of life will give way under the impact of the new surroundings, but the elementary-school teacher, a young man of European origin, is not so sure. He told me of a conversation with a Habbani serving in the army, who was forced by some unusual circumstance to ride a truck on the Sabbath. To his surprise and relief nothing happened to him after he committed this grave sin, which he found to be proof that it was no sin at all, contrary to what he had been taught; otherwise, God would have punished him instantaneously. One of the diseased stalks in the field.

Although polygamy is gone, a bride still has to be bought from her father. The current price is 500 to 1,000 Israeli pounds, a substantial sum for a working man; to this one has to add the price of a handwrought silver belt and a watch which the bridegroom must present to his bride before the wedding, bringing the high cost of marriage up another 150 pounds or so.

The parents justify the custom of taking money for their daughters by considering the payment a compensation for the shame of having produced a girl instead of a boy. Habbani daughters are exempt from army service along with other Orthodox girls, and have little contact with the world outside Barreket — so that the egalitarian spirit of the country is slow in reaching them. But again, there are exceptions.

A few months before, the village was the scene of an episode the kind of which had never happened among the Habbanim. A girl of the Mafai clan, the third in importance of the four existing clans, fell in love with a Matof boy who was very handsome but despite his aristocratic origin didn't have the price of a bride. The whole village saw the father beat up the love-sick girl and drag her to the police for intervention.

The police naturally told him to go home and stop beating the child, which further infuriated the old man who could not understand why the authorities refused to protect his rights as a parent. There is a sad ending to the story: the boy fell in love with another girl whose father didn't insist on the money and married her, while his first love is ashamed to show her face in public.

There are cracks in the wall which stood firm for ages and was bodily transferred to another land and another century. However, no one seems to regret it or to worry about the future, except the very old men who spend their time in the synagogue, dressed in long robes because it is indecent to enter a holy place in trousers, and wonder about the new generation which no longer brands children with hot irons to ward off evil spirits, permits strange men in white to attend women in childbirth, and has been forced to destroy family life by allowing only one wife to a family.
